

Essex Mortlocks

The earliest record for Mortlocks in Essex seems to be the 1503 will of William, kiddleman of Foulness, although there is no indication in it that he left issue [a kiddle is a stake fence, set in a stream for catching fish].

The recoverable story really starts in Birdbrook, which, in harness with the Suffolk Mortlocks of Haverhill, shows John and Lewis holding land in Birdbrook and Steeple Bumpstead in 1549. The name of Lewis attaches quite pointedly to just one branch of Suffolk Mortlocks so this Lewis must surely be related, or even ancestral to the Lewis in Clare who married there in 1588. The Birdbrook story continues consistently to the mid-seventeenth century at which point the line appears to die out; there are no Mortlock entries in the 1662 Hearth Tax.

The oldest known Mortlock property lies in Haverhill, the 'Anne of Cleves'¹ house. This was built by John Mortlock in 1620, replacing 'Wagg's Farmhouse' which at one time was known as the Manor House although there are no indications of any Mortlock manor lordship. John's son Thomas, a brewer, made some improvements in 1656, marked by his initials on a fireplace, and there was some further improvement marked by his and his wife's Anne's initials on a fireplace - which can still be seen - the following year. After Thomas' death Anne remarried well and gave the house to the church for a vicarage. It is now a physiotherapy centre.

Samuel of Paglesham, Essex, who died in 1793, had land in Haverhill; and a Mortlock Coldham seems to have had an interest in Haverhill in the early eighteenth century. A Henham inheritance has been documented under Haverhill but this went to the distaff side on the death of a Mortlock widow. There are records in nearby parishes in the next century which bring us hiccuping along to Ridgewell where our most notorious Essex Mortlock, the transportee burglar Thomas, received his come-uppance in 1832. Ironically he was one of the most biologically successful Mortlocks and left a large progeny in New South Wales. Two other transportees seem to have been related to him so Ridgewell may have been glad to see the back of their Mortlocks.

The Haverhill, and, it will be seen, Poslingford records are thus necessary to an understanding of the north-western branches of the Essex Mortlocks, and are therefore included at the start of this Essex table.

The Essex Mortlocks mostly owe their origin to a very few progenitors, living in the county at the beginning of the nineteenth century, as will be seen below.

For several the metropolis beckoned, particularly the docklands of the East End which offered the those whose country skills were now obsolete (for a farmhand is highly skilled and knowledgeable) an alternative to vanished agricultural work.

¹The Flemish Mare, as far as is known, never came anywhere near Haverhill. Wagg's Farm's land was originally Church land, sequestrated by Henry VIII who gave its rents to Anne of Cleves as part of her divorce settlement. The modern naming of the house dates to an enterprising estate agent in 1975.

Hempstead, Finchingfield and the Bardfields

There was a “Mortlock’s Farm” at Radwinter near Hempstead (as there is also one just N of Haverhill). Thomas and his wife Margaret had land in Little Bardfield 1585; the Thomas who died in 1653 in Haverhill also had land in Little & Great Bardfield, and he or a forebear was clearly living in Little Bardfield in 1615. In 1672 Thomas Mortlock’s house in Finchingfield was a meeting place for non-conformists, which probably explains the sparseness of early records for this family.

All the “modern” Hempstead Mortlocks appear to be descendants of the Arbour who died in 1811. Most were landless but Luke, 1803-89, got himself, by endeavour or marriage, a farm. His heir, Charles Luke, who farmed Charity Farm there for 57 years, celebrated his golden wedding in 1927. He was a staunch Conservative and served on the Board of Guardians and then on the Rural District Council, and was in demand as a judge of ploughing matches. In 1912 he had an unwelcome visit from a local horse thief. On his mother’s side he claimed descent from the notorious, cruel, psychopathic highwayman Dick Turpin. Three of the couple’s sons emigrated to South Africa, Thomas and Phillip both overstating their ages. Charles Luke himself lived to be nearly a hundred years old.

Disaster hit in 1878. Mr Mortlock of Parish Farm, Braintree, shot a pigeon that was lurking on the roof of one of the farm buildings. A piece of wadding fired the thatch. The Great Bardfield fire brigade managed to save the farmhouse, but the outbuildings and a quantity of grain and livestock were destroyed [Times, 30.4.78].

The Christian name Luke seems to be exclusive to this family, which idea I have rather leant on in order to recover missing members from Kent and elsewhere.

With regard to Thomas William born 1855 in Tillingham, he seems to have absconded in early 1901, although the family had a cover story that he was leaning out of a window hanging bunting for Queen Victoria’s funeral when his bowler hat fell off and he fell to his death trying to grab it. Further he was said to have been buried in the very last grave that he dug in Nunhead cemetery, but there is no trace of this in the cemetery records. He seems to be the Thomas with a different reported birth year travelling with an American circus in 1911.

Colchester

In the 1553 Diocesan Visitation of Chichester a Robert Mortlock was recorded as ‘Prebendary of Hova Villa’, that is to say he was that canon of Chichester whose stipend was secured on revenues from the parish of Bolney in Sussex. In 1557 Queen Mary appointed a Robert Mortlock to a life wardenship of St Mary Magdelene hospital in Colchester Infirmary. For this role that Robert must have been literate so he was probably a priest, presumably conformant to the restored Papist regime. Was he the Robert who, parson of Martyr Worthy in Hampshire, left a will in 1561 which mentioned the church at Foxearth which lies on the Essex side of the Stour quite near Clare? He could well have been turned out after a year in the Colchester job, life tenure or no, when the Protestants got back in in 1558. However, he seems to have successfully blown with the wind (like the fictitious Vicar of Bray a century later) to get into another living. Apparently unmarried, he names a brother John and a brother (in law?) Samuel Pannell and other relations with surnames Lakes and Fowler whom I have been unable to place.

The Colchester area next figures in Tudor times with a family at Aldham. There are then discontinuities until a more conventional genealogy presents itself at the end of the eighteenth century. Some members moved to Kent. Some skilled men are seen - bricklayers, bookbinder, a carpenter, a cabinet maker. So there must have been some money for apprenticeships. The 1861 census and others show several families of cousins growing up together in close propinquity. Some seem to have done well enough for themselves as tradesmen; but two ended up in the workhouse, one an old lady, the other barely 21.

At Eight Ash Green just west of Colchester Ernest Mortlock started a garage business in 1928. His family came from Chevington in Suffolk and he had already tried his luck in Wandsworth.

Weeley & St Osyth

Lewis of Weeley, born in 1770 and probably son of a Lewis who died there in 1801, is interesting because of the name he bears, although he is only a labourer. His son Robert became a sadler and moved to Cambridge. Another Lewis, born in 1792, died near St Osyth over eighty years later. Further use of this Christian name so peculiar to Mortlocks can be seen in the St Osyth area later.

Peldon & Wivenhoe

Peldon presents a more consistent picture with six generations stemming from a Richard of Birdbrook whose father seems to have been born in Ridgewell (I am indebted to Jane King for these links). However this Richard seems to have migrated into Birdbrook from somewhere else, via his marriage. Most of the junior branches finished up as labourers; primogeniture rules. Some descendants ended up in Bromley by Bow alongside some of their Colchester "cousins". A multiple birth gene seems to have come in, possibly from Deborah of Fingringhoe. Maybe she also brought some money or land; her father-in-law had two settlement examinations against his name so is unlikely to be the source of her sons' inheritances - not that they all escaped from the lab-trap. In Peldon itself the Mortlocks must have formed a close-knit group - in 1861 John, Isaac and Elijah, with their families, were all living next door to each other.

The senior branches prospered with William farming at Wivenhoe and Charles becoming a miller there. Essex Windmills, Millers and Millwrights by KG Faries, published by Charles Skilton in 1988, has Charles taking over milling there in 1874, "after which milling continued under the direction of the Mortlocks until the Second World War, the last of the millers of that name dying about 1950". The mill with its tiles and plastered roundhouse was arguably erected about 1816. Wind milling there stopped in the early 1880s, following a disastrous fire (endemic to windmills) in November 1882. The fire was discovered by Charles' brother who lived nearby and fortunately the wind blew the flames away from the living quarters. In any case the mill had for some time been running on only two sails, the other two having been blown off the year before, and this imbalanced running may have caused the bearings to over-heat. Milling therefore concentrated on the steam mill alongside which had been there some while. The site was levelled and redeveloped in 1972.

The surname shifts to Modlock with one branch of the Peldon Mortlocks (Peldon 8 & 9)

Percy William, the village paper boy, got off his bike to enlist in 1914, and was killed at Neuve Chapelle, aged only sixteen.

Chelmsford & Maldon

The juror recorded in the sixteenth century was probably a Haverhill Mortlock. The main family here seems to start with a John living in the area at the start of the nineteenth century. Some of these Mortlocks finished up in London. Confusingly, a journeyman miller who traces back via Great Cornard in Suffolk to Glemsford in that county married here and started a family in Chelmsford in the 1840s. His brother Thomas moved to Braintree, Bures and Little Waltham. This may relate to a Shimpling Mortlock (related to the Glemsford line) being settled in Maldon, with a Shimpling bride, in 1783.

Robert Richard went to sea and became Mate of the sailing barge Albion. From there he worked up to be Captain of the barque Maidstone. Anchored off the mouth of the Colne 2.10.1875 he and three others took the ship's boat in for provisions. It overturned on the return trip and all were drowned. Robert's body was eventually recovered from the beach at Brightlingsea and returned to St Osyth for burial [Leeds Mercury 9.10.75].

Ongar & Epping etc

Joseph, yeoman of Epping, left a will in 1663, but does not appear to have founded a line in the area; he had land in Wethersfield where he probably "belongs".

John, who married in High Ongar in 1780, may have had more children than the chart shows, but his Thomas certainly left a considerable posterity in the area. A miller, he appears to have moved about which suggests that he never had his own mill; however by 1866 he was posthumously described as "farmer". Some of his descendants moved into London as that century wore on. Many of them were skilled craftsmen or business people; perhaps this made it easier for them to migrate. Three of his daughters married in Shoreditch.

The region about Thurrock is interesting as there are several Mortlock marriages recorded in the area in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, although there seems to be nothing to show in terms of obvious descendants in the nineteenth.

Rochford and Romford RDs (Barking, Cranham, Hadleigh, Leigh on Sea, Southend etc.)

Note a Mortlock girl born in Wandsworth who died in this area. Spare a thought, also, for the two pensioners in their little terraced cottage in Upminster, murdered by the Germans in 1940. William Robert was quite possibly the youngest of eight siblings of which at least three had died as toddlers. I expect the German pilot got an iron cross for his gallantry.

Walthamstow and West Ham

This area included a family from Mildenhall, listed separately in the Suffolk part of this analysis, and a family in what was then close to a thriving docklands, who lived in Plaistow in West Ham but ended up by the shore of Lake Windermere. This family having left, there were NO Mortlocks listed in the area in 1861.

Many of the West Ham records cannot easily be related further back geographically; the number of places from which Mortlocks migrated to West Ham is larger than for any other destination, and includes locations elsewhere in East Anglia; however one family came into Stratford(E) from Shoreditch. Within the borough of West Ham there were separately identifiable Mortlock families in Stratford and in Canning Town, East Ham, North Woolwich, and Plaistow. As late as 1895 the last four of these were still shown on the map as separate villages.

The origin of the street name Mortlock Court in this area is 'Mortlock's Modern Dairies' of 65a Whitton Rd, Manor Park, London E12 (directors in 1955 included a JA Mortlock). The firm spent much of the late 1950s fruitlessly trying to obtain official sanction from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for their alcoholic flavoured milk, the 17.5° proof 'Noggo original creme punch' [PRO,MAF/101/95]. In 1944 James of Manor Park left £54,800; his age at death was 68 and the only James I have found who fits this was one born in Stratford East 1Q1876. He married somewhere in the West Ham registration district in 2Q1899. You will find him, perversely, among the Norfolk Mortlocks.

At first glance he seemed an unlikely candidate; he is shown as a railway boiler maker in the 1901 census. You can find him in the 1881 census under 'MORDLUCK' (yet another transcription error to plague the researcher). His mother Sophia Emma had married, secondly, a John NESS, a stonecutter from Scotland and had settled at 1, Solway Road, West Ham; but her first (Mortlock) husband was from Norfolk.

In 1912 James was running his dairy at 515, Katherine Road, Forest Hill. By 1929 the enterprise was called the Mortlock Sterilized Milk Suply Co. Ltd [see ref. in the Unigate plc papers at the Museum of English Rural Life, TR UGT/193]. One can imagine that the post-war epithet 'modern' comes from removal of the dairy from one premises to another, newer one. This may be connected with the reuse of whatever agricultural land had supported the original cows. If you paraded a cow through the area now you would probably arouse some curiosity as to what this strange beast was; milk comes from supermarkets, innit? Mortlock Court must be the only reminder of this vanished agricultural enterprise, unless cows range Wanstead Flats or are used to keep the grass down in the vast spread of cemeteries that are now the immediately adjacent green lung in this area.

Souvenirs of this enterprise - Dinky-toy style model 1965 Bedford Vans with 'Mortlocks Dairies' painted on the side - were being offered on the internet for upwards of £50 in 2004.

You may be wondering, by now, about the Mortlock Close that appears immediately above the Mortlock Court entry in the A-Z index. But this is south of the Thames in Peckham (in SE 15) and I have yet to discover how it earned its name; there was a Mortlock Gardens in Peckham in 1879.

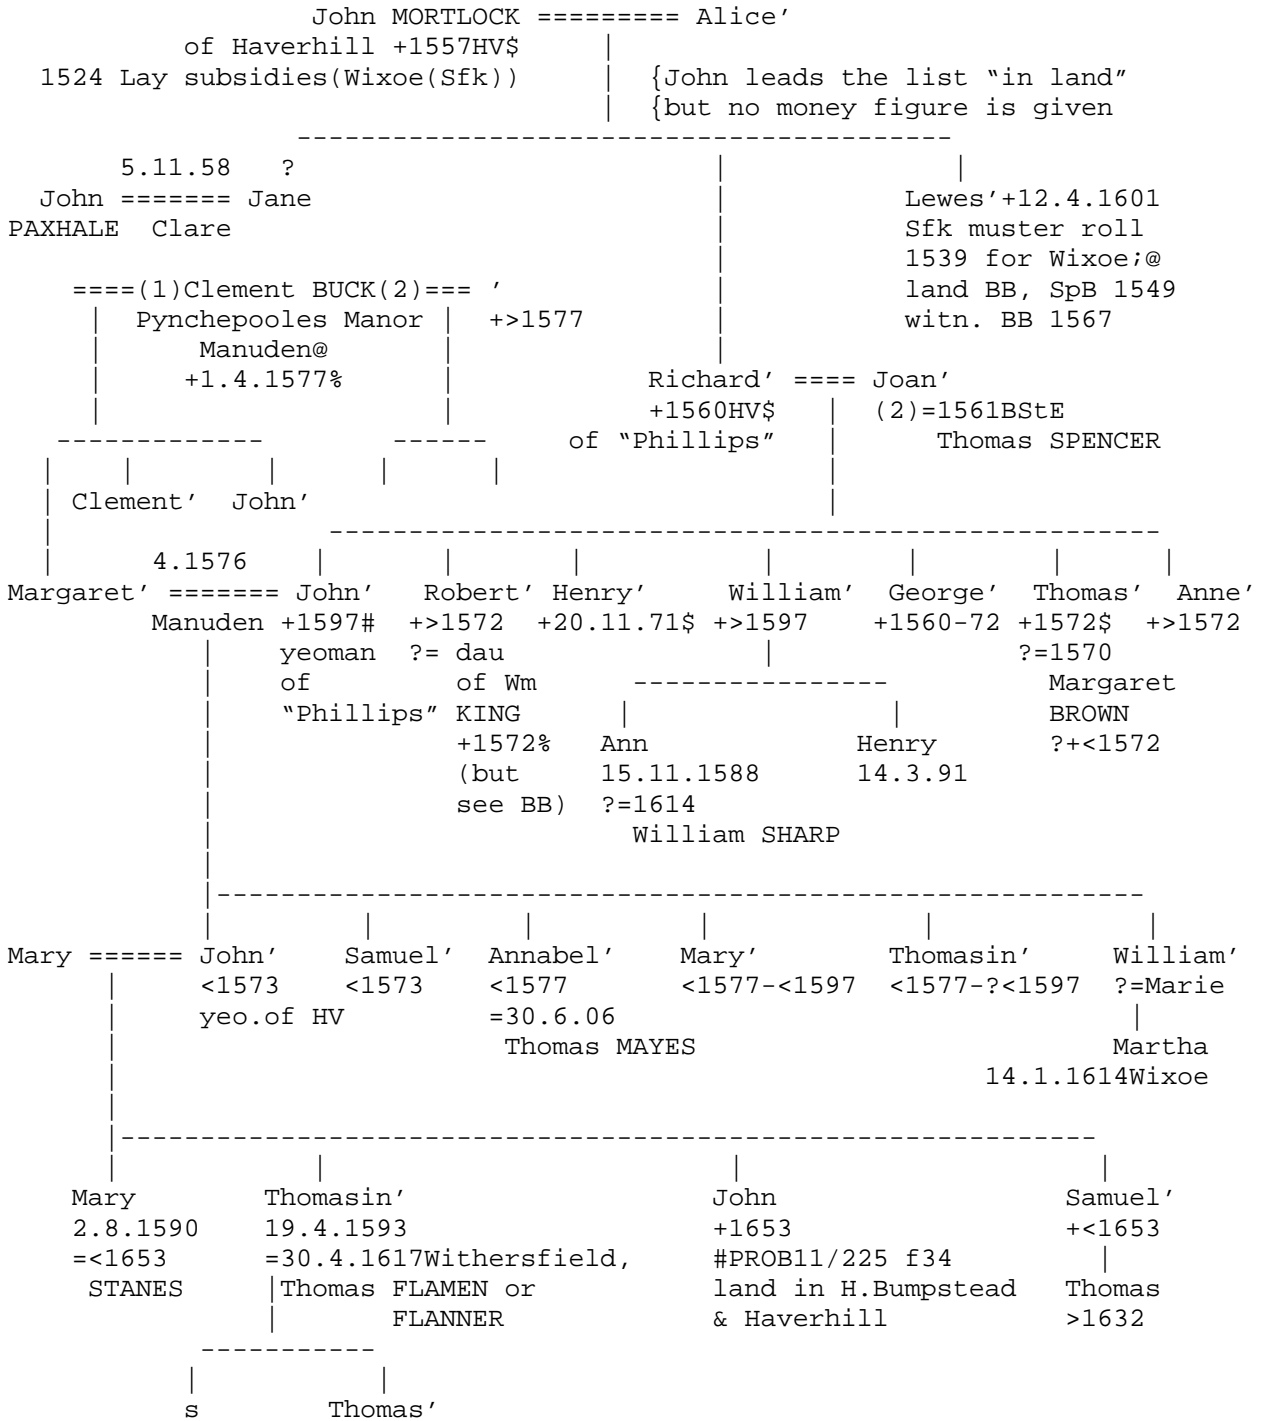

My apologies for a number of genealogical loose ends in Essex. As to the males at least, I believe many of these are incomers whom I have failed to identify in their parent counties. Mea culpa.

^ farm labourer; 7 yrs transportation at Essex Quarter Sessions 23.2.1836, for stealing geese at Ridgewell (two previous convictions for felony) arrived Tasmania in Lady Nugent 12.7.36 via Fortitude hulk at Chatham ('character very bad, twice imprisoned before'); there 1836, 1841; ticket of leave 23.11.40; Certificate of Freedom 23.2.43. [Essex Standard, 23.2.36 & 25.3.36]

^ Sarah's baptismal record says she is 'age 12' and the 'daughter of William and Susan' - this clashes with an account that William died when Thomas was 9.

James of Ridgewell convicted of larceny, 2 months, Quarter Sessions 4.1829, had got off a charge of obtaining money falsely at Lent Assizes 1824 (found not guilty of stealing 'By Proclamation'), another previous acquittal January 1822[ECRO,Q/SBH 495/97].

Thomas M' yeoman of Lt Bardfield sued for unlawfully detaining an apprentice 3.8.1613; signed a petition midsummer 1615; see Haverhill, Suffolk.

@Tirza, Heb. 'helpfulness', was the fifth daughter of Zelophehad the son of Hephher (Num.xxvi 33). In its Germanic form as Abel's wife in Gessner's Death of Abel the name "became a great favourite among the lower classes of England whence Thirza has become rather a favourite in English cottages".

This is not the only case where the age of a juvenile servant appears to be over-stated in a Victorian census. Maybe the girl herself exaggerated in order to obtain the employment in the first place.

Times, 2.9.1885: Inquest at Sidcup into the emaciated baby of William and Harriett which died of being fed on biscuits in sugar water instead of milk

^ Richard, Hannah and Thomas were taken into care in May 1886 (actually taken first to the Workhouse and then placed in an Industrial School) because 21, Burman St, Southwark where they were living was 'a house frequented by disorderly women' (i.e. a brothel) [Pall Mall Gazette 20.5.1886]. The form of the proceedings, bizarre to our view, was that they were hauled before the court and charged with this: at 9, 8 and 5 they must have been terrified.
